GIGANTIC LAND SERBIANS REPEL THE INVADING ARMIES

SECOND BIG DAM ON WILLOW CREEK ASSURED; FERTILE SOIL FULLY DEMONSTRATED.

(From Tuesday's Daily.)

W. H. Rosecrans, consulting engineer of the Hassayampa Alfalfa Farms Company, stated yesterday that construction of a second water storage dam on Willow creek had been approved and would be under headway before December. This structure will be of the same dimensions as that of Granite creek, and its purpose is to conserve all waters of both sheds and to unite the two storage supplies for a reclamation undertaking to cover the holdings of the three companies interested, embracing an area of over 20,000 acres of land.

Mr. Rosecrans also imparted the important information that the initial successes made in experimental farming of certain crops precludes any possibility of failure with the water available. He also stated that abundant water for irrigating the first unit of 4,000 acres from Lake Watson is ready without taking into consideration what future storms may provide. He is enthusiastic over what has been accomplished to date under a system of dry farming, and this will be intensified later when water is utilized during the months required for maturing crops, by irrigation. He said:

"This proposition is an unqualified success, and is made so by the exceptionally high fertility of the soil, which has been fully demonstrated by the large crops grown. The three holding companies, the Arizona, the Hassayampa, and the Hoosier, now propose to go ahead, working in conjunction, and every foot possible of that rich land is to be developed. I am surprised to see what has been so practically proven without irrigation, and the present inspection has been a very agreeable one. Just wait and see what the future will most assuredly bring in this gigantic farm movement. It will prove a revelation to all."

Mr. Rosecrans left yesterday for Tucson, to be absent until Thursday, when it is expected many stockholders will arrive from Terre Haute, Indiana, for a general consultation on important matters pertaining to their business plans for the future.
